BEST BET: Race 9 - #4 Devuelta

This is a horse who has been in very good form lately, and trainer Peter Walter keeps her at the low claiming level after a win last time out. The challenge today will be stepping up into open company after "notching the non-winners of three" condition last time out, but she has been consistent and has show in the past that she can string good performances together. I think she also has the ability to be tactical enough to get a good trip in this race, which does not appear to have an abundance of speed signed on.

LONGSHOT: Race 3 - #3 Fergielicious

I have been a fan of this filly for her a while, and she is dangerous when competing at the right level. After two back to back wins, she stepped up into open company last time out, and still ran a solid fourth, beaten by three lengths. She is now back in state-bred company, which I think is good for her, and she boasts a win over this very track. She also has been training exceptionally well since her last start, and is coming in fresh, not having raced since June 10. I expect her to sit a perfect stalking trip.
